

In the constant quest for quality, Marco Felluga is at the forefront in both vine cultivation and winemaking. Research and development combined with tradition, passion and territorial knowledge is the driving force of this innovating family.

The headquarters of the company is in Gradisca d'Isonzo, which in the fourteenth century was a fortified citadel of the Venetian Republic, whose city walls were designed by Leonardo da Vinci and is the gateway to the Gorizian Collio. Marco Felluga's vineyards extend over 100 hectares (some family owned, some family operated) among the towns of Farra, San Floriano, Oslavia e Cormòns, with a larger production of white wines, obtained from both autochthonous and international grapes.

The same attention to detail used to determine the best grape selection during the cultivation process is used in the vinification process. This process is a blending of traditional practices and modern techniques. Each wine has its own fermentation and maturation process at controlled temperatures.
